HIV infection

HIV stands for human immunodeficiency virus. The virus is passed on through blood and some bodily fluids, for example during unprotected sex, through injecting drugs, or from mother to child during childbirth. HIV damages your immune system, so you're more likely to get other infections.

You may be devastated to find out that you have HIV. But drugs can help control the virus and slow down or stop the damage it causes to the immune system. Drug treatments allow people with HIV to stay well and live relatively normal lives. If you start treatment early and keep yourself healthy, you could live almost as long as someone without HIV.

But treatments can't get rid of HIV infection, and you can pass the virus on to others even while you're taking treatment. You will probably need treatment for the rest of your life.

We've brought together the best research about HIV infection and weighed up the evidence about how to treat it. You can use our information to talk to your doctor and decide which treatments are best for you.

What is HIV infection?

HIV is short for human immunodeficiency virus. If you become infected with HIV and don't have treatment, it will eventually damage your immune system. You slowly lose the ability to defend yourself against infections and certain types of cancer.

HIV destroys cells that are part of your immune system, the name given to the parts of your body that protect you from infections. This reduces your ability to fight off infections.

Stroke, prevention

If you've had a stroke, you may be worried about having another one. But there are treatments that can lower your risk.

The treatments we talk about here are used to prevent a second stroke for people who've had a stroke or mini-stroke before. To read more, see What treatments work for preventing another stroke?

Stroke is a medical emergency, and someone who has a stroke will need urgent treatment as soon as possible after the symptoms start. To read about emergency treatments, and to find out more about what strokes are and how they happen, see our information on Stroke, emergency care.

We've brought together the best research and weighed up the evidence about how to prevent strokes. You can use our information to talk to your doctor and decide which treatments will work best for you.

What increases the risk of a second stroke?

If you've had a stroke or a mini-stroke, you're at risk of having another one. Your doctor will probably want to know your stroke risk, because this helps determine what treatment you need.

If you've had a mini-stroke, your risk of having a full-blown stroke is highest in the first few days and weeks afterwards.^[1] It's very important to get treatment as soon as you can after a mini-stroke. Urgent treatment can stop you going on to have a stroke.^[2]

You're also more likely to have a stroke if you:

- Have atrial fibrillation (an irregular heartbeat)

Strategic planning directions of Malaysia's higher education: university autonomy in the midst of political uncertainties

Abstract In Malaysia, the national government has seen fit to steer higher education policy in a direction that is in the 'national interest'. This notion of 'national interest' is best exemplified by the changing relationship between the State, higher education institutions and the market. Since the late 1960s, we saw the gradual but steady erosion of university autonomy with the increasing dominance of the State. The recently launched National Higher Education Strategic Plan 2020 and the National Higher Education Action Plan, 2007–2010, which operationalised the Strategic Plan, promises greater autonomy for the universities. While this increased autonomy for universities could be regarded as Malaysia's response to deal with emerging issues in higher education management and governance, the amendments to the University and University Colleges Act, 1995 have not resolved the issue of wider autonomy from the Malaysian treasury regulations for public universities. For the State, in the present climate of political and economic uncertainty, giving full autonomy to the public universities is seen to be inappropriate and untimely. The State considers public universities as still heavily dependent on the State for resources, and thus the need for regulation and supervision.

Introduction

In many developing countries, and Malaysia is no exception, historically the national government has and continues to steer higher education policy in a direction that is generally considered as in the 'national interest' (Morshidi and Abdul Razak 2008). Arguably, this notion of 'national interest' is best exemplified by the changing relationship between the State and public higher education institutions (in particular the public universities). The changing State-University relationship is an issue today and will be more so in the future as i-LEARN Ace is a 21st-century e-learning platform developed exclusively by Sasbadi Online. One of the unique features of i-LEARN Ace is the note function, also known as a note summary, consisting of 200,000 notes. i-LEARN Ace also features a set of 300,000 questions, kept in its question bank which makes it easier for students to answer practice questions and access lesson notes either via online or offline. In addition to keeping up to 100% of its current Ministry of Education syllabus, i-LEARN Ace also provides three-way communication between parents, teachers and users because the platform is specially designed to help enhance users learning skills from Standard 1 - Form 5.

Access Level: Nationwide Access. Please click on the i-Learn Ace logo or link to start your access. (web portal version). You can also get access to i-Learn Ace by using the i-Learn Ace mobile apps. Download and install i-Learn Ace mobile apps from [Google Play Store \(for Android users\) OR App Store \(for iPhone/iPad users\) at your smartphone/tablet. Kids A-Z (Raz Kids)

Kids A-Z is an online e-learning portal/application developed by Learning A-Z that is easy to use, specifically for children and primary school students. Through this portal, students can access over 4,000 titles of e-books and audio books (fiction and non-fiction) as well as more than 50,000 interactive learning content and activities. The portal also allows users to listen to audiobooks, read e-books, learn to read quickly or to record their reading performance easily. Kids A-Z is also very easy to use, using your own tablet / smartphone. You just need to install and launch the mobile app called Kids A-Z which is available from the App Store \(For iPhone / iPad / Apple devices\) OR the Google Play Store \(For smartphones / tablets / Android-based devices\) .

Access Level: Access is within PNM and all 13 State Libraries premises only. Please click on the Kids A-Z logo / link to start access (web portal version). If you are using a tablet / smartphone, please install and launch the Kids A-Z mobile app. Please enter any one of the following [Teacher Username options as required by the system: upustaka001 to upustaka003 OR pnm001 to pnm002 . Click the Go button. At the next page, students will need to select and click on any of the desired student name icons (Student Username). The next page will ask the student to enter the Student Password . For your information, Student Password is the same as the Student Username you selected. [Example: If you have selected upustaka003s23 as a Student Username, then your Student Password is upustaka003s23]. Click the Go button. Go to the Reading menu >> Reading Room to read e-books or listen to audio books (fiction / non-fiction) OR Go to the Science menu >> Library, to read e-books / audio books (in Science subject). Please logout from the portal/app system after using this database.
